

PATIENTS AMONG US

At the age of 11, Angela was diagnosed with Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia, a cancer of the white blood cells.

As part of her extensive treatment under the care of Dr. Joe McNamara, Angela underwent two and a half years of chemotherapy, a bone marrow transfusion and several blood transfusions.

Because blood was available when it was needed, today Angela is a healthy high school freshman. Thanks to the generosity of volunteer blood donors, this story has a happy ending.

Many people say they have never donated blood simply because they have never been asked. Please, Consider Yourself Asked. The difference you'll make in the life of a patient simply cannot be overstated.
